ABSTRACT

For decades, American flutists have sought to identify specific traits that define their playing as a whole. While the “French School” has been characterized by a preoccupation with tone, a standard repertoire, and set of teaching materials written by Paris Conservatoire professors, no such definition can yet be set forth for the “American School.” This document provides a clear starting point for research into the what, where, why, and how of the “American Flute School” by first identifying who is associated with that school.

By tracing the lineage of transverse flute playing from teacher to student through the past 300 years, we may identify orchestral flutist, soloist, and teacher, Georges Barrère, as a primary influence upon American flute playing. Barrère and his students – and his students’ students – have taught approximately 91% of all living flutists in the United States today. Of that vast number, approximately 87% can trace their heritage (through one or more of their teachers) to Barrère student William Kincaid, renowned flutist of the Philadelphia Orchestra and pedagogue at the Curtis Institute of Music.

It is important to note that most modern musicians study with more than one teacher over the course of their career (usually between three and eight). By looking at the data from different perspectives, we can see a second important tradition of flute playing descend from Georges Laurent, principal flutist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and instructor at the New England Conservatory of Music, including approximately 59% of American flutists. A third tradition of flute playing in America (including roughly 55% of American flutists) descends from French flutist and pedagogue, Marcel Moyse, who taught summer classes in Vermont for several decades after a lengthy career in Paris. Each of these influential pedagogues graduated from the Paris Conservatoire, having studied with the distinguished master, Paul Taffanel.

A lengthy appendix of biographical information contains data for more than 8,000 flutists, obtained from a combination of primary and secondary source material, and will underpin numerous related studies as we continue to define the “American Flute School.”

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I wish to thank my adviser, Katherine Borst Jones, and committee members Lois Rosow, and Christopher Weait for insight and guidance of immeasurable quantities, as well as encouragement throughout this lengthy study.

I extend my heartfelt thanks to Christina Pelletier for the hundreds of hours of work committed at the onset of this study, and for sharing wonderful anecdotes from various flute master classes.

I thank Susan Nelson for her kindness and generosity in providing biographical information, accurate life dates and name spellings for numerous historical flutists at the onset of this project.

I gratefully acknowledge the assistance of members of the FLUTE e-mail list group, which is administered and maintained by Larry Krantz, John Rayworth, Helen Spielman, and Nelson Pardee. List members who have been especially helpful include Ardal Powell, Robert Bigio, John Wion, Nancy Toff, Leone Buyse, Patricia George, Trevor Wye, Cate Hummel, and Claude Monteux. Extra thanks to John Wion and Larry Krantz for their wonderful web-listings of historical and current orchestral flutists performing throughout the world.

I thank Rae Terpenning, George Pope, Amy Zuback, Hal Ott, Kyle Dzapo, John Bailey, and Madeline Neumann for making it possible to share this project with the National Flute Association at conventions in Columbus, OH, Dallas, TX, and Washington D.C.

I extend thanks to Barbara Suetholz for providing me with biographical information from the programs of each convention of the National Flute Association since its inception, and to all convention attendees who have graciously taken part in this survey and encouraged me at many different levels.

My warmest thanks to archivists Joanne Barry of The Philadelphia Orchestra and Barbara Perkel of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for assistance with performance records and press clippings of flutists of these ensembles. Also thanks to Associate Archivist Rich Wandel of the New York Philharmonic for a roster of flutists from each of the New York Symphony Association ensembles for years 1877 to 1928.

I thank the department heads, secretaries, archivists, and flute teachers of hundreds of colleges and universities for their willingness to provide names and dates of employment for past and present flute instructors at their institutions. I especially thank Jeni Dahmus, Archivist of the Lila Acheson Wallace Library of the Juilliard School, for help compiling an exhaustive list of the school’s flute alumni and instructors. Also thanks to Jean Morrow and her delightful staff at the Harriet M. Spaulding Music Library of the New England Conservatory of Music; Joanne Seiter, archivist of The Curtis Institute of Music, for assistance with faculty and student rosters and recital and commencement programs throughout the history of the institution; and archivist David Peter Coppen of the Sibley Music Library of the Eastman School of Music for providing names and dates of employment for flute instructors at the school.
I thank the following individuals for their help compiling student listings: Nancy Toff for students of Georges Barrère, Leone Buyse for students of Joseph Mariano, Alicia DiDonato for students of John Wion, and Danielle Hundley and Katherine Borst Jones for students of Robert Willoughby. I also thank Julius and Ruth Baker for assistance with student rosters and Baker memorabilia.

A project such as this would not be possible without the participation of a generous and collaborative community of musicians. We are blessed to have such camaraderie among flutists, and I extend my heartfelt appreciation to all who have participated at any level in this study.

Finally, I wish to thank my husband, Keith, for his continued faith and support, and my son, Joey, for patience and unconditional love.

CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

For decades, American flutists have sought to identify specific traits that define their playing as a whole, with relatively little success. The so-called “French School” of flute playing, however, has distinct connections to a single professor and has been succinctly characterized by noted scholar Ardal Powell:

“The notion of the ‘French Flute School’ usually refers to a style of teaching and playing the instrument that originated with Claude Paul Taffanel (1844-1908) and his pupils at the Paris Conservatoire around the turn of the twentieth-century. In a second, less strict sense, the term also refers to a French-influenced style of flute-playing that became dominant in Europe and America as Conservatoire-trained players filled orchestral and teaching posts and as the recording industry carried their sound and style to all corners of the developed world. In that looser sense, we can easily list the style’s main attributes: the use of the French-style silver flute, a preoccupation with tone, a standard repertoire, and a set of teaching materials in which the Taffanel-Gaubert method and the tone development exercises of Marcel Moyse (1889-1984; Conservatoire 1906) hold a central place.”

While this recent assessment gives a definite context to the “French School,” it is (out of necessity) still quite vague. In the continuing quest to define the “American School,” we hope to uncover similar markers for ourselves, allowing us to begin more fruitful conversations about the what, where, why, and how of flute playing in the United States. The present study provides a clear starting point for such discussion through statistical data that identify names and patterns of influence, as well as individual teachers who have most profoundly affected the nature of flute playing across the nation.

2 Ann McCutchan hints at the controversy surrounding the “French School”: “It is] easily recognized but variously perceived, [as consisting of] finesse of tone and dynamics, a clear singing sound, an infinite color

The purpose of this project has been to gather data on American flutists and their teachers, spanning as many generations as possible, and to organize these musicians into a “family tree.” The expectation was that the data would reveal whether there were common “families” among famous flute players and teachers – perhaps personal, perhaps national (e.g., French-American and German-American traditions) – or simply disparate sets of students and teachers.

Initial data, not limited to America, came from secondary sources. Early resources for this study include encyclopedias and biographical dictionaries such as the New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart, Baker’s Biographical Dictionary, and François Fétis’s Biographie universelle des musiciens. A helpful specialized source has been Aldine K. Burks’s 1969 self-publication, Follow the Pipers: A Guide to Contemporary Flute Artists and Teachers. In this work, Ms. Burks lists the findings of her massive survey of professional American palette, and a spirited yet thoughtful interpretive personality dedicated to the composer’s intentions [rather than the performer’s virtuosity].” Ann McCutchan, Marcel Moyse: Voice of the Flute (Portland, OR: Amadeus Press, 1994), 47.

Footnote 2 cont’d] The Flutists’ Family Tree was conceived, in part, as a final project for a flute pedagogy course at The Ohio State University in January 1999. Christina Pelletier and I assembled a poster presentation of about 275 flutists that spanned nine generations of transverse playing. Each flutist’s name was written on a brightly colored leaf with broad lines connecting teacher and student; the result more closely resembled a spider plant than a tree!
band and orchestral players and college and university instructors of 1968-69. The largest portion of the book is devoted to an alphabetical listing of survey respondents with their professional and biographical data, including lists of both their teachers and students. Though the list of students contains only those who were also respondents to the survey, this source provides a wealth of insight and information into the professionally active flutists of the period just before the inception of the National Flute Association in 1972.

A vital organization of flute players and teachers, the National Flute Association has grown from a relatively small conference to one that encompasses 5,000 to 6,000 members annually from the United States and Canada as well as thirty to forty foreign countries. One of the association’s highlights is its annual convention, often featuring several hundred performers and presenters over a four-day period. The program booklets from each of these conventions include self-submitted biographies for most of the artists involved, which have been extraordinarily helpful both for learning about young musicians and tracing established flutists’ careers over time.

Still other profitable resources have included articles, interviews, and obituaries from The Flutist Quarterly (journal of the National Flute Association) and Flute Talk (monthly magazine published by The Instrumentalist Publishing Company). These periodicals provide biographical information about prominent flutists of the past three decades. Older periodicals such as The Woodwind and The Flutist, and The Flute Worker (a relatively short-lived broadsheet distributed by Emerson Musical Instruments) shed light on the previous generation, and Claude Dorgueille’s The French Flute School: 1860-1950 helped link together as many as seven generations of flutists, following a chain from teacher to student beginning with Professor Paul Taffanel at the Paris Conservatoire in the 1890s.

The second step in data collection was directed toward individual flutists. An announcement of the project via the internet\(^5\) led to the immediate submission of nearly 1,000 flutist biographies via e-mail from the United States, Canada, Great Britain, Scotland, and Australia. I logged each entry and sent a reply to the respondent that included a personalized flutist lineage and sometimes follow-up questions about teachers mentioned in the submitted biography.

Each respondent was asked to provide the following information: birth date and location of birth, educational background, teaching and performance experience, present location, and present and former teachers. While many biographical entries may inordinately highlight a flutist’s study with famous flutists, this project hopes to eventually encourage a different attitude. By focusing on the nature of a student’s response to certain pedagogical techniques, or through analysis of recordings, scholars may eventually be able to identify how one’s playing is reflective or derivative (or not) of one’s teachers. Those flutists responding to the Flutists’ Family Tree project have been asked to designate one “primary” teacher whose philosophies, pedagogies, tone, etc., have had the most profound impact upon them.\textsuperscript{6}

\(^5\) The original internet announcement was posted to the 2,000+ members of the FLUTE-list e-mail group monitored by list-owner Larry Krantz, as well as to selected flutists around the globe, during the months of March and April, 1999.

The study has, from its inception, been inclusive of flutists of all abilities: amateur and professional, young and old, erudite scholar, seasoned performer, and raw beginner.\textsuperscript{7}

It is surprising that the family tree includes a number of self-taught flutists, ranging from amateur musicians and woodwind doublers, to pivotal ancestors like Michel Blavet (1700-1768) and Charles Nicholson (1795-1837) whose experimentation with the instrument has shaped numerous generations of flute playing.

Further collection of individual flutist biographies has taken place at conventions of the National Flute Association, College Music Society, Central Ohio Flute Association, San Diego Flute Guild, and Flute Society of Washington (DC), at which the Flutists’ Family Tree project has been presented and/or displayed. Submissions obtained at these venues include new flutist entries, additions and corrections to prior web-based submissions, and a host of suggested sources of further information about flutists whose ancestry is not yet known to the project. In addition to mere data collection, each presentation has generated an increasingly broad-based interest and enthusiasm for the project.

\textsuperscript{6} Biographical information for flutists (see Appendix A) with source code “PS” lists first, the teacher designated as “primary,” followed by all other teachers named. The breadth and scope of the present document precludes more detailed analysis at the individual level. As future studies focus on individual pedagogues and their students, the quality of data available will be improved by dates (length and nature of study) and perhaps a summary of teaching and performance traits as perceived by both the student and the professional community.

\textsuperscript{7} Submissions received by January 1, 2003, are included in Appendix A, regardless of nationality, and include flutists from the United States and forty-nine countries around the world. Additions and corrections may be made at any time through the Flutists’ Family Tree website: \url{http://www.geocities.com/demifair}.
Along with biographical submissions, many flutists have been inspired to include anecdotes of lesson or master class experiences. Some clearly illustrate the potential for the Flutists’ Family Tree to assist in defining pedagogical traits of specific teachers. A letter from Sarah Andrew of Arizona State University, who previously studied with Terri Sundberg, states: “Your ‘family’ tree sounds very interesting! My former teacher was a student of Jeanne Baxtresser and when I was able to play for Jeanne in a master class, she turned to my teacher and said ‘I hear my playing in your students.’ The lineage certainly is fascinating!”

A third approach to data collection has included the survey of hundreds of colleges and universities across the United States and Canada. Respondents from these schools have assisted by compiling rosters of past and present flute instructors, including dates of service where known. In specific instances where faculty members have figured prominently in the common ancestry of the “American School,” I have investigated further to obtain as much information as is publicly available about the school’s flute alumni. In several cases, this included compiling a comprehensive roster of flute students by year and sorted by instructor, but results vary with the condition of each institution’s archives. Virtually none of the schools’ alumni information is yet fully accessible in database form, even to institutional archivists.

Preliminary results grew evident even in the early stages of the data collection process. After a very small amount of research, it became apparent that flutists from every state in the country – famous or not – could be connected to common musical ancestors.

As web-based biographical submissions were logged, I began to notice a discernable pattern, showing students from across the United States connecting through William Kincaid, long-time principal flutist of the Philadelphia Orchestra and professor at The Curtis Institute of Music, to the historical flutists of the Paris Conservatoire (as outlined in Chapter 2). This was the first verifiable evidence pointing to a single teacher from whom an “American School of Flute Playing” might actually have evolved.

As the project grew, I drew even more conclusive evidence about the origins of American flute playing. Kincaid’s teacher, Georges Barrère, along with two other highly influential French flutists – Georges Laurent and Marcel Moyse – jointly function as the roots of our present-day “American School.”9 It is interesting that all three studied at the famed Paris Conservatoire with Paul Taffanel before journeying to musical careers in the United States. Today’s living American flutists are able to trace their flute ancestry through one or more of their teachers to Taffanel (nearly without exception), through a cumulative total of thirteen or more musical generations back to Michel Blavet – one of the earliest players of the one-keyed transverse flute.

Current data (shown in Appendix B) includes extensive rosters of students for both Georges Barrère and Georges Laurent, as well as 163 students of Marcel Moyse.10

9 I owe a special debt of gratitude to Lois Rosow for pointing out the proverbial “forest” which was home to the Kincaid family “tree,” and to Claude Monteux and Nancy Andrew for correspondence about the nature and importance of Laurent and Moyse, respectively.
10 Though most of the Moyse students listed in Table 3.3 are American flutists, there are several who studied with him during his professorship at the Paris Conservatoire (e.g., Michel Debost, Andre Jaunet,
Of the 4360 flutists for whom an American-school ancestry is known, 3954 of these (approximately 91%) are Barrère descendant; 2576 (approximately 59%) are Laurent descendant; and 2387 (approximately 55%) are Moyse descendant. Of the 91% population who are Barrère descendant, an amazing 87% trace their ancestry through William Kincaid.

Two of Kincaid’s pupils have emerged with significant ranks of students of their own. Descendants of both Julius Baker and Joseph Mariano hold significant teaching and orchestral positions across the country, as well as having developed extraordinary solo careers. As one may easily discover by examining the roster of Kincaid students (see Appendix B), Baker and Mariano are not the only offspring to make a huge impact on the pedagogy of flute in America. However, their long-standing association with three of the nation’s foremost music schools (Juilliard and Curtis, and Eastman respectively) gave them a unique opportunity to work with very large numbers of highly advanced students (since these schools typically attract the most superior applicants) that others were not afforded. Flute pedagogues such as Clement Barone, Jr., Harold Bennett, Judith Bentley, Frances Blaisdell, Doriot Dwyer, Britton Johnson, John Krell, Betty Bang Mather, William Montgomery, George Ellers Morey, Jr., Donald Peck, James Pellerite, Maurice Sharp, Albert Tipton, Robert Willoughby, and John Wion have also been producing [Footnote 10 cont’d] and Andre Prieur). This makes statistics somewhat difficult to calculate, especially in light of Debost’s immigration to the U.S. and Oberlin professorship since the late 1980s.

It is important to note that most modern musicians study with more than one teacher over the course of their careers (usually between three and eight). By looking at the data from different perspectives, it is possible to see the influence of multiple flutists reach beyond a total of 100%.

This percentage reflects 3414 Kincaid descendant flutists out of 3911 Barrère descendant flutists (roughly 87%). The percentage of Kincaid descendant flutists in the population at large (3414 out of 4312) is roughly 79%.
students of high caliber for decades. As the Flutists’ Family Tree becomes more and more complete, these branches (and many others) will expand into prominent limbs of their own accord.

Despite the clarity of these findings, many of the data are complex (as footnotes 9 and 10 illustrate). While exploring the implications of these complexities remains outside the scope of this study, it is useful to be aware of them.

A musician’s style may evolve slowly – or change dramatically – according to life experiences. British flutist Geoffrey Gilbert, for example, taught and performed in the leading institutions and orchestras of England for years before his study with Paris Conservatoire professor Rene LeRoy completely reformed his ideas on tone and articulation, and encouraged his switch from wooden flute to silver. Clearly, we should expect Gilbert’s students before and after his study with LeRoy to have received broadly divergent instruction. While the nature of the “British School” is well beyond the scope of the present document, it must eventually be taken into account in future “American School” studies since Gilbert immigrated to the United States in 1969 (for health reasons) and continued his remarkable teaching career here.

As Gilbert’s situation suggests, yet another difficulty in defining an “American School” is that not all its constituent players and teachers are even American. As world travel becomes faster, easier, and less expensive, and foreign study continues to be respected and cherished, a myriad of international influences come to bear upon flute playing in the United States.
Even when only American teachers are involved, the situation is complicated. The last three decades have seen a shift from musical study that remained with one master teacher to one which embraces many different teachers and teaching philosophies. It is thus extraordinarily rare for a flutist of today to have only one or two teachers; most list between three and eight. Imagine charting a family tree where each individual has five sets of parents, whose genealogical lines in turn converge and diverge through five other sets of parents for three or four generations before reaching a point of common ancestry. Moreover, nowadays more and more musicians choose smaller and smaller arenas of specialization. Paradoxically, this promotes a sense of community rather than isolation, as they learn from others in their chosen area of specialization. This study hopes to pinpoint the teacher(s) whose pedagogy and performance have had the most impact upon a flutist, and what, if any, traits are common among classmates. As mentioned above, the data collection process asked flutists to make a distinction between their most influential teachers and all others with whom they have studied.

Still, it is important to recognize the vast array of influences upon one’s musical education. Even more profoundly influential than multiple teachers (and confusing for the unsuspecting genealogist) has been the wide proliferation of recordings and the unforeseen effects of digitally enhanced performances upon modern-day audience expectations for flawless technical mastery. In short, the modern world is very different from 19th-century France, where the Conservatoire produced a unified and inbred community.
The ramifications of this study are numerous and far-reaching, and will inspire a complex and rich journey for all who seek to document their flute lineage. This document provides the background information and data necessary for that journey. The second and third chapters will discuss French-school influences and specific flutists who have had critical bearing upon flute playing in this country, namely Georges Barrère, Georges Laurent, and Marcel Moyse. Chapter four makes observations about the nature and distinctions of a Boston school of flute playing, while chapters five and six track the dissemination of Barrère descendants through the highly influential William Kincaid and two of his former pupils. A concluding chapter summarizes the findings of this document and suggests numerous related studies for the future. The lengthy appendices of biographical and ancestral information contain data for more than 8,000 flutists, obtained from a combination of primary and secondary source material.

It is my most fervent hope that the Flutists’ Family Tree will evolve into a resource for research into specific flutists, teachers, and characteristics that define the nature of flute performance in the United States, and inspire a greater sense of community between amateur and professional flutists worldwide.

OUR HERITAGE FROM THE PARIS CONSERVATOIRE

If one begins with the flute studies of William Kincaid and traces back from student to teacher to determine the ancestry of the “American Flute School,” it takes only a single generation to link our tradition to the famous “French School” that is represented by the playing and teaching of the faculty and students of the Paris Conservatoire. Kincaid’s primary instruction came from Georges Barrère, a noted soloist, conductor, and teacher at the Institute of Musical Art in New York City, and a Conservatoire graduate. Along with Barrère, we also see prominent roots of the American School extending from Georges Laurent and Marcel Moyse, both fellow Conservatoire students. To more clearly understand the tradition of flute playing and teaching that these three ambassadors brought to the United States, it is helpful to examine the history and general practices of the Paris Conservatoire and its flute professors.

Founded in 1795 by decree of the national government, the new school was the product of a merger between the École royale de chant et déclamation lyrique and the Institut national de musique. Students were accepted by audition, proportioned equally among both sexes and among all departments (orchestral instruments, piano, organ, voice, theory, solfege, and composition), in the ideal ratio of 600 students to 115 teachers.¹³

Six of these professors were apportioned to teach flute, but only five were specifically named on the first roster of instructors. It is difficult to ascertain whether a sixth was actually hired because several teachers were listed by surname only, and many without indication of instrument or subject. Of the five named flute teachers, three had previously served under the Conservatoire’s first director, Bernard Sarrette, in the band of the Garde nationale. Joining François Devienne, Antoine Hugot, and Jacques Schneitzhoeffer were the two remaining flute instructors, Johann Georg Wunderlich and Nicholas Duverger.

Through the past two centuries, the Conservatoire has employed a relatively small number of flute professors, though most have had lengthy tenures (see Table 2.1). It is important to note that all of these professors were themselves graduates of the Conservatoire, and that many are remembered as composers and method book authors as well as flutists. More than two-thirds of these influential teachers play a role in the ancestry of the American Flute School (see Figure 2.1).

Students of the Conservatoire were, and are, divided into classes based on age and talent, with the older and more talented typically joining the first class, while the younger students fill the second and third classes. Currently, students attend lessons as a group, where each takes his turn playing for the instructor. All may benefit from the critique given and the added incentive for practice provided by the constant scrutiny of one’s peers. Though it is not certain when the “master class” model was first instituted, it has been used to great advantage by Paul Taffanel and his successors.

developments of the instrument, and the instrument’s repertoire. Early players François Devienne (1759-1803), Antoine Hugot (1761-1803), and Johann Georg Wunderlich (1755-1819) left us with treatises (written for their Conservatoire pupils) that now serve as primary source material for performance practice of the one-keyed transverse flute. While the Hugot and Wunderlich Méthode de flûte (Paris, 1804) and the Wunderlich Principes pour la flûte (Paris, c.1815) have fallen out of circulation,¹⁴ Devienne’s Méthode de flûte (Paris, 1795) has been frequently re-edited, revised, and enlarged. Table 2.2 below illustrates the various method books created by Paris Conservatoire professors.

The second way in which Paris Conservatoire professors have shaped the history of the flute has been through their various adoptions (or in some case, rejections) of instrument-makers’ advancements toward the modern flute. Transverse players in the 1700s performed on an instrument with a single key (D#), while as early as 1800 method books began appearing for a new (German) six-keyed flute. By 1806, J. Wragg’s Improved Flute Preceptor set forth instruction for an eight-keyed (also German) flute, and Benoit-Tranquille Berbiguier (a student of Wunderlich) produced his Méthode pour la flûte (Paris, c.1818) for the four-keyed flute.

Tulou played and taught the eight-keyed flute until his death in 1865, though the innovations of Theobald Boehm (inventor of the modern flute) began appearing as early as 1831. Dorus was an important French champion of the Boehm flute, reportedly practicing it in secret for more than two years before unveiling it in a public performance that “won the cause” for this new flute.\(^{15}\) In 1860, Dorus replaced Tulou at the Conservatoire, and the Boehm flute was adopted there. Dorus also improved upon Boehm’s early attempts through his invention of a closed g#-key that circumvented many fingering difficulties. Years later, Taffanel would write of Dorus: “His invention of the G-sharp key removed the obstacle which, perhaps, could have run the Boehm flute aground, since the new fingering for this note revolutionized the habits of all the artists.” Dorus introduced the Boehm flute to the Conservatoire in 1860 when he was appointed Tulou’s successor.

Altès, another proponent of the Boehm flute, was appointed Conservatoire professor in 1868, and illustrates a third way in which Paris teachers have influenced numerous generations of players. Through composition, many of the flute professors have shaped our heritage, pushing for an instrument with greater powers of intonation and technical flexibility, shaping a generation of virtuosic flutists with their concours pieces written for the students’ annual examinations, and promoting the Boehm flute’s new capacities.

The one-keyed flute had been constrained by intonational difficulties when playing in tonalities beyond one or two sharps, while the four-, six-, and eight-keyed flutes had made only modest improvements in this regard. The new Boehm flute, however, was quite agile in flat-key tonalities and at least as adequate as the previous systems in sharp keys. As more and more players adopted the Boehm flute, compositional writing for the instrument began to utilize the strengths of this new system.

17 Taffanel and Fleury, 51.
Flutist and composer Lee Lattimore details the noticeable effects upon Altès’ concours pieces:

“These changes are seen in idiomatic choice of tonalities, and motivic construction of themes and passagework. Altès composed more in the flat keys than did Tulou, which resulted in more consistent use of the B-flat thumb lever and avoidance of E to F-sharp cross-fingerings. In this regard Altès’ compositional construction, particularly in passage-work, reflects a sensitivity to idiomatic and fluid patterns of fingering on the Boehm flute. His awareness would have been particularly keen to these aspects since he was a successful and talented convert to the new Boehm system. He also emphasized more varied and rapid articulation in his solos than did Tulou, particularly double-tonguing.”\(^{18}\)

Adrian Brett observed similar traits in Altès’ famous Méthode de la Flûte. Though the majority of the work deals with the acquisition of technical facility, Brett also found it prophetic that Altès wrote very clearly about his concepts of tone color and control, reflecting a change in compositional style from “flashy, brilliant solo” to works placing more tonal and expressive demands upon the flutist.\(^{19}\)

The annual examination mentioned above, known as the Concours du Prix, allows students a juried public performance opportunity. Generally, it is held in the summer months and students must attend classes for one academic year and pass a preliminary audition before participating. Contestants on each instrument are given the same piece to prepare, chosen by a committee of professors. In the Conservatoire’s early years, the flute work was commonly newly composed for the occasion by one of the flute professors, and distributed four weeks before the contest. Since 1876 there has been a sightreading component to the exam, and in recent years, the students have also had to perform a solo from the Baroque or Classical period in addition to the contemporary work.

The Concours du Prix is judged by a group of eight or nine professors and distinguished musicians from outside the school, and is presided over by the director of the Conservatoire. A teacher may not sit on the jury for his own students. Prizes are awarded by majority vote from the casting of secret ballots. The premier prix, first prize, constitutes “graduation,” though students may leave without ever attaining this distinction. First and second prizes might consist of a monetary reward, musical instrument, or music, and might lead to various employment opportunities – due in part to the professional caliber of jury and audience members. Winners of the first and second accesits, honorable mentions, are rewarded with medals of silver or bronze.

American flute students and teachers (and other instrumentalists as well) may notice numerous associations between themselves and the Paris Conservatoire heritage, with which Barrère and Laurent were most familiar. In particular, the American use of the master class and juried performances are suggestive of this Paris heritage. We may also observe a number of method books published by flute professors, and growing recognition for flutist-composers.

In the early 1900s, Barrère and Laurent engaged students in private (i.e., one-on-one) lessons, though Laurent’s advanced pupils were taught in master class format. Moyse, through his summer sessions in Vermont, taught strictly through the master class. Though today we see the majority of American collegiate flute instruction taking place in private lessons, the master class is still an important venue for learning. Studio teachers typically utilize the master class format for mock-performance opportunities for their students; these may be held on a weekly, bi-weekly, or monthly basis. Today’s master class is also a highly popular format for both amateur and professional summer workshops and convention program experiences.

The concept of juried performance has also been translated to American school systems, though usually these occur at the end of each term of study (rather than the conclusion of each school year) and are neither open to the public nor judged by members outside the school’s faculty. A further distinction of the American school jury performance is that the repertoire is typically drawn from all styles and composers, rather than works composed by the instructor specifically for the event.²⁰

Many prominent U.S. instructors have published method books, compiled from years of teaching experience, to serve the needs of both their own students and others (see Table 2.3). In contrast, the number of U.S. flutist-composers is fairly few, though several have achieved national recognition at various levels. Meredith Willson, best known for his Broadway hit Music Man, was a flute student of Barrère. Robert Dick, famous for challenging the compositional boundaries of flute music with various extended techniques, is an active lecturer at universities around the world. Both he and Gary Schocker, a pianist in addition to flutist-composer, perform and tour frequently as flute soloists. Finally, Katherine Hoover and Jennifer Higdon teach composition (at the ²⁰ As modern musicians often have very narrowly defined specializations, it would seem uncommon for most of these flute professors to consider themselves capable composers. On a national level, however, one may see the inclusion of newly-commissioned works (by leading composers) in final-round repertoire of the National Flute Association High School and Young Artist competitions.

Manhattan School and Curtis Institute respectively), perform regularly as flutists, and are frequently engaged as conductors.

Table 2.3: Method Books by Flute Professors of the United States
We may see other examples of flutist-conductors (such as Keith Brion, Salvador Brotons, John Heiss, Claude Monteux, Keri-Lynn Wilson, and Ransom Wilson) that honor the legacy of Paul Taffanel, conductor of the Paris Opéra from 1890 to 1906.

One circumstance in which the American musical atmosphere has amplified a condition existing on a much smaller scale in Paris may be seen when flute teacher and student perform side-by-side in the orchestra. William Kincaid apprenticed in Barrère’s flute section of the New York Symphony, Joseph Mariano and many others joined Kincaid in the Philadelphia Orchestra, and numerous Mariano students supplemented the flute section of the Rochester Philharmonic. In France, a student might later join the ensemble of his teacher, but typically it was at a much later date.

American students have frequently succeeded their teachers upon orchestral retirement. Kincaid’s immediate successor, James Pellerite, studied with him at the Curtis Institute. Mariano’s replacement in Rochester (at both the symphony and the Eastman School of Music) was his pupil Bonita Boyd. Julius Baker’s prodigy, Jeanne Baxtresser, has assumed several of Baker’s roles during her career, including principal flute of the New York Philharmonic and instructor at Carnegie Mellon University and the Juilliard School of Music.

Clearly, there are more than mere ancestral connections between the Paris Conservatoire and its American offspring. One may guess, however, that some of these same relationships exist throughout England and Australia, and perhaps even Japan (owing to the translations of Moyse’s studies). The analogous journeys of our fellow flutists, however, remain to be seen in later studies.

AMBASSADORS OF THE FRENCH FLUTE SCHOOL

Having explored flute textures within the larger tapestry of the Paris Conservatoire, we were able to identify many ways in which American flute students and teachers resemble their French forebears. Some may even liken William Kincaid’s immense pedagogical influence and mentoring to that of the cher maître Paul Taffanel, whose teaching inspired a deeply reverent following and dramatically changed the nature and level of flute playing within his country. Kincaid’s ancestral connection to Taffanel is through Georges Barrère (a noted soloist, conductor, and Kincaid’s teacher at the Institute of Musical Art in New York City), who studied with Taffanel during the latter’s very first years of employment at the Conservatoire.

While Barrère may be the most renowned and charismatic Conservatoire graduate to distinguish himself on American soil (arriving in 1905), he was decidedly not the first French flutist to exert a powerful influence in the United States. From 1887-96, Charles Molé performed with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and was reputed to be a brilliant soloist as well as composer. Léon Jacquet bridged the years 1895-98, and then André Maquarre began as principal flutist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1898. Maquarre was highly respected as conductor, pianist, and composer, as well as being a brilliant flutist, giving the U.S. premiere of Claude Debussy’s Prélude à l’Après Midi d’un Faun under the direction of Georges Longy. His brother, Daniel, also performed with both the Boston (1903-09) and Philadelphia (1910-18) orchestras.

Boston’s next famed principal flutist was Georges Laurent, who held the position for 31 years (1918-49). Adrian Brett asserts that though Laurent was highly respected, he “arrived a little too late to make the impact his talents deserved.”21 By Laurent’s 1918 U.S. arrival, Barrère was already firmly established in the public eye as the premiere flute soloist in New York, and Kincaid was also starting out on his own notable career.

A third highly influential French flutist arrived in the United States just after Laurent concluded his tenure with the Boston Symphony. Marcel Moyse settled with his family in Brattleboro, Vermont in 1951, after a career as Paris Conservatoire professor and Paris Opéra Orchestra flutist was derailed by World War II. His summer workshops were both well attended and highly regarded. Let us now examine how these three most noteworthy ambassadors of the “French School” – Barrère, Laurent, and Moyse – came to make their mark in the New World.

Georges Barrère

Georges Barrère was born on October 31, 1876, in Bordeaux, France, and his family moved to Epernon, a small town outside of Paris, when he was three. He learned the tin whistle and fife at an early age, and later became a member of the Bataillons Scholaires, from which he received both military training and a musical instrument.

Barrère’s fife teacher introduced him to Léon Richaud, a member of the Lamoureaux Orchestra and professor at the Paris Conservatoire. When Barrère was 13, Richaud took him to audition for Henri Altès at the Conservatoire. Barrère audited classes the following year, and gained regular admission for study in October 1890.

By his own account, Barrère’s progress under Altès was poor. In 1892, he obtained the deuxième accesit, or second honorable mention, but did not advance to graduation the following year. When Altès retired in October 1893, Paul Taffanel became Barrère’s teacher. This is widely thought to be a turning point in Barrère’s life, as Taffanel became a very close mentor and supporter. Finally obtaining the first prize in 1895, Barrère stayed on an additional year to continue lessons with Taffanel, and to study composition with Xavier Leroux and Raoul Pugno.²²

Though Barrère’s ancestral connection (and in turn, William Kincaid’s) to Taffanel is irrefutable, it has been argued by Adrian Brett that aspects of Barrère’s playing and teaching were perhaps more reflective of Henri Altès. In particular, Brett notes that “Barrère’s playing on recordings is not a true reflection of Taffanel’s teaching in regard to the expressive use of vibrato in the tone.”²³ In Taffanel’s Méthode complète de flûte (Paris, 1923), the use of vibrato is expressly forbidden. Brett explains that this does not refer to vibrato as recognized today, but rather the “incessant shaking superimposed on the tone – a frenetic unchanging wobble” that characterized Barrère’s playing (as well as that of many other French flutists at the time), which would be passed on to Kincaid in his formative years.\footnote{Brett goes on to say that in the 1930s or 1940s Kincaid worked seriously to solve the problem of this fast, persistent vibrato, but by a vastly different method from that used by other Taffanel students (such as Gaubert and Moyse as early as 1900-1910). On this point, Brett argues that Kincaid’s “American School” does not reflect the same expressive characteristics embraced by Taffanel’s other students.}

Over the next decade, Barrère launched his career in Paris. With the assistance of Paul Taffanel, he established the Société moderne des instruments à vent, recruiting top performers and convincing prominent composers to write music for woodwind ensemble. He performed with the Paris Opéra, Colonne, and Geneva Exposition orchestras, playing under conductors Doret, Chausson, Saint-Saëns, and Dalcroze. Through these ensembles he was able to play alongside renowned flutists Adolphe Hennebains, Leopold Lafleurance, and Philippe Gaubert, and also teach at Vincent D’Indy’s Schola Cantorum.

At age 29, Barrère accepted the invitation of conductor Walter Damrosch to perform as solo flutist with the New York Symphony Orchestra and teach at the Institute of Musical Art in 1905, for an annual salary of $2,000. He retained this post until 1928 when the Symphony was merged with the New York Philharmonic. According to Barrère biographer Nancy Toff, “It is not clear from the records whether Barrère was officially offered the opportunity to share the principal chair with John Amans, but it is well known that he refused to play second flute or even co-principal to anyone.”\footnote{Toff, “Monarch of the Flute,” 50.}

Barrère joined the newly formed Chautauqua Symphony in 1928 as principal flutist and assistant conductor, performing frequently as soloist. Perhaps the most remarked-upon aspect of Barrère’s career is the platinum flute upon which he played beginning in 1935. Its public debut took place on July 28 with the Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra, and in February 1936, Barrère premiered Edgar Varèse’s Density 21.5 (named for the density of platinum) at Carnegie Hall, giving the platinum flute a secure place in history.

Barrère’s own place in history is surely secured through his performance career, but has been amplified exponentially through his numerous successful students. In addition to those who studied with him at the Institute of Music and Art (which later became the Juilliard School of Music), he also had many private students in New York, Woodstock, and Chautauqua. His love for teaching is documented by Nancy Toff:

“I enjoy teaching because the art of the flute has such tremendous possibilities and I should like to see it reach its Parnassus before long. I want to train excellent flute players for all the leading orchestras so that composers listening will realize these possibilities and give the flute interesting things to do. There is something noble about the art of teaching, for it is an art in itself. To prepare something for the next generation is far more satisfying than the momentary thrill that accompanies a performance. Teaching should almost be a religion. That is my belief.”

Barrère’s noble aspirations certainly came to fruition in the generation of players noted in Table 3.1 below. These disciples of Barrère spread the legacy across the United States as they assumed orchestral positions in San Antonio, Detroit, Indianapolis, Cleveland, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Chicago, Minneapolis, and throughout New York itself.

William Kincaid, principal flutist of the Philadelphia Orchestra and professor at the Curtis Institute of Music for four decades, was by far the most dominant force in the further proliferation of this branch of the Flutists’ Family Tree. While some 91% of American flutists living today may trace their ancestry through one or more of their teachers to Georges Barrère, roughly 87% of them find that path through William Kincaid.

Georges Laurent

Born June 7, 1886, Georges Laurent studied the flute with Philippe Gaubert from 1897 and Paul Taffanel from 1900. He was a graduate of the Paris Conservatoire, and immigrated to the United States in 1918. Employed as principal flutist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he also taught at the New England Conservatory of Music from 1924 to 1933.
Laurent joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1921, and had a very positive relationship with one of its conductors, Pierre Monteux. During Laurent’s three-decade tenure with the Boston Symphony, he performed thirty-six times as soloist with the orchestra. Most frequently performed were J.S. Bach’s Suite in B Minor and Brandenburg Concerto No. 5, followed by Arthur Foote’s A Night Piece, Charles Griffes’ Poem, and David Stanley Smith’s Fête Galante. Unfortunately, as Serge Koussevitsky took the baton, Laurent expressed more and more dissatisfaction with his position, and upon retirement from the orchestra in 1952, he reportedly stopped playing the flute.

Perhaps Laurent’s most visible contribution to the musical community (outside of the Boston Symphony and New England Conservatory positions) was his founding in 1921 of the Boston Flute Players’ Club. This loose organization, which performed one hundred chamber music concerts between 1921 and 1940, included many string and wind players of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in addition to leading Boston flutists. In fact, the organization might be more aptly characterized as a chamber music group than a flute club, for as its programs progressed, the flute weighed less and less heavily in repertoire selection. Also as time progressed, more newly-composed music was introduced at each concert. These premieres are indicated in the programs as “First Time,” “First Time in Boston,” and “First Time in America,” and include the works of such composers as Albert Roussel, Joseph Wagner, Arthur Honegger, and Jacques Ibert. Several women composers’ works were also featured in programs during the first six years, namely those of Mrs. H.H.A. Beach, Mabel W. Daniels, Edith R. Noyes, Margaret Starr McLain, and Henriette Renie.

28 Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives. Performance record card for Georges Laurent indicates thirty-six solo performances, though obituary (Boston Traveler, Friday, September 25, 1964) states thirty-four.

Laurent’s playing has been characterized by Claude Monteux as possessing an “innate sense of honesty and expression,”30 and by Robert Willoughby31 and Adrian Brett32 as “instinctive” and “intuitive.” When recalling his lessons as a student of Laurent, Willoughby remembers most vividly the free vibrato and beautiful sound of his teacher.33 Being a descendant of both Kincaid and Laurent, Willoughby also characterizes the “old French style” embouchure as tighter than that advocated by Kincaid (and Kincaid’s student Joseph Mariano), who proposed more flexible jaw movement and cheek inflation.

For all his years in the United States, Laurent never mastered the ability to express himself well in English. Consequently his students tried to copy his sound without benefit of any analytical explanation.34 It is unclear whether the language barrier or Laurent’s own instinctive musicianship has been more responsible for his characterization as a “natural” player.

Laurent counts among his students James Pappoutsakis and Lois Schaefer, along with Harry Moskovitz and Robert Willoughby, who descend from both Kincaid and Laurent (see Table 3.2 below). Recorded evidence shows that Laurent’s playing more closely follows the “French School” traditions taught by Paul Taffanel (as do Moyse’s recordings), while Barrère’s shows more influence of his early studies with Henri Altès, thus giving us two distinct schools of French influence here in the United States.\textsuperscript{35}

Table 3.2: Students of Georges Laurent
Marcel Moyse

Marcel Joseph Moyse was born May 17, 1889, in the village of St. Amour, France. He was adopted by Josephine Perretier after his mother died less than a week after his birth. Moyse lived with the Perretiers until he was seven, when his maternal grandparents took him to Besançon. Although Moyse began lessons on the silver flute, he did not pursue it seriously until moving to Paris at age 15 to live with his uncle (a cellist in the Lamoureux Orchestra). After one year of study with Adolphe Hennebains, Moyse was admitted to Taffanel’s class at the Paris Conservatoire. He earned the premier prix at the extraordinary age of 16, and began freelancing while continuing his studies with Hennebains, Taffanel, and also with Philippe Gaubert.

At the age of 18, he contracted a serious upper respiratory infection, possibly pleurisy or pneumonia, from which doctors gave him only a six-month life expectancy. With determination and resolve, Moyse rested and slowly rebuilt his strength, later winning principal flute appointments at both the Paris Opéra and Opéra comique, though he chose to play only with the latter to keep his summer schedule free.

His first three method books, Studies and Technical Exercises (1921), Daily Exercises (1922), and Scales and Arpeggios: 480 Exercises for Flute (1933) address issues of instrumental technique. We later witness a shift in Moyse’s priorities as De la Sonorité (1934), Twenty-Four Little Melodic Studies with Variations (1939), and Tone Development through Interpretation (1962) all focus on tone and interpretation.

In 1931, upon Gaubert’s retirement, Moyse assumed the position of flute professor at the Paris Conservatoire. The bulk of his recorded legacy comes to us from this time period, with earliest solo recordings dating from 1926 and ending around 1938.
Moyse’s career took a dramatic turn when the Nazis invaded Paris in 1940. He fled with his family to St. Amour, then taught at the Geneva Conservatory for a time. When he returned to Paris after the war, his former teaching and playing positions were no longer available, having been assigned to Gaston Crunelle. After two years of waiting, the Conservatoire established a class for him, alongside Crunelle, but this arrangement did not appeal to Moyse.

Leaving the Conservatoire in 1948, Moyse gave master classes in Europe, lived for a time in Argentina, and eventually relocated with his family to Brattleboro, Vermont, in 1951. His daughter-in-law, Blanche Honegger, and son, Louis, joined him in the Moyse Trio (flute, violin, piano), and helped establish the highly regarded Marlboro Music Festival.

While Moyse taught at Marlboro College, and for a time traveled to give lessons in Boston, New York, and Montreal, his performance career was essentially finished. His summer workshops in Brattleboro were attended by countless amateur and professional flutists. Of his teaching style, Ann McCutchan writes, “Some were intimidated by Moyse’s authoritative and increasingly pointed criticism; others were enthralled by his eloquent speech, his singing approach to playing, and his insistence that each player give every ounce of effort to musical expression.”

Many of his devoted students worked together to organize the Marcel Moyse Society in 1989, the year in which Moyse celebrated his one-hundredth birthday. This thriving society has developed an archive of rare materials, including letters, photographs, audio tapes, and film footage, which is housed in the Lincoln Center Library for the Performing Arts in New York City. In addition to its annual newsletter, the group has also released two compact discs of historic Moyse recordings and an interview of Moyse by Eleanor Lawrence on cassette.

Marcel Moyse’s contributions to the world of flute pedagogy are numerous and pervasive. Through both his written material and legacy of flute students, his impact can be felt across the United States and around the world, though his recorded legacy has perhaps adversely affected the way modern students view Moyse as a flutist and pedagogue.37

His earliest publications address issues of technique, while the later works focus on beautiful tone and interpretive skills, for which he is primarily remembered today.
Part One of his De la Sonorité (1934) is one of the most famous tone exercises written for the flute, consisting of melodic motion between subsequent half-steps throughout the range of the flute. Through diligent and intelligent practice, the student may achieve homogeneity of tone across these note pairs, through successively larger intervals, and eventually throughout all registers.

The development of the embouchure, in order to obtain this homogeneity, is a fundamental aspect of flute playing for Moyse. Former Moyse Society president and Moyse student Eleanor Lawrence notes another important distinction for flutists of the Moyse tradition. “Many people today think of the low register as their problem register, 37 Rachel Lynn Waddell, “Marcel Moyse Between Two Centuries: Examining Early Twentieth-Century French Flute Performance Practice Through Recordings” (DMA diss., University of Nebraska-Lincoln, 2002), 84, 105-6. Ms. Waddell surmises that current students of the flute approach historical recordings with modern expectations of flawless technique, precise pitch, and rhythmic precision, rather than an appreciation of spontaneity and subtle nuance, which is more characteristic of the time period.

[but] both Boehm and Moyse thought that it was your basic register, that everything else is hard."38 She goes on to illustrate how Moyse’s *Tone Development through Interpretation carries this pedagogical principle to its readers:

So Moyse starts organizing this with the dynamic soft in the low register. And he writes thirteen exercises on that. Then he expands it into loud. Then he does diversified expression, all before he moves up into the rest of the flute. I think in this way, the flutist’s tone develops, rather than forces its way into every register.39

In addition to Moyse’s penchant for beautiful tone and musical expressiveness, his students note that his repertoire choices were often made in an effort to help preserve nineteenth-century performance practices for later generations. Catherine Hummel speaks about Reichert’s Fantaisie mélancolique, which appears as No. 38 in Tone Development:

Several of Moyse’s students recall him working on this piece in classes, and note that he was aware that his style of playing this (with rubato and great expression through tone color and vibrato) was a nineteenth-century tradition of playing, and would be soon lost. He charged his students with passing on this legacy.40

Alain Marion, quoted in Trevor Wye’s beautiful Moyse biography, speaks on Moyse’s legacy from a French perspective, but one which we also share in America:

Moyse had a natural inquisitiveness into all the musical and technical processes which go into making up the complete flute player. It was this gift, more than any other, that contributed toward his phenomenal success as a musician. Taffanel, Gaubert and Hennebains opened some doors for him, gave him insights into what could be done to raise the flute from a pipe into an instrument of great expressive beauty. One thing is strange; Moyse arrived after Taffanel, Hennebains and Gaubert, and opened up for us the musical style of the nineteenth-century much better than his teachers.41

40 Ibid., 70.
41 Trevor Wye, Marcel Moyse: An Extraordinary Man, ed. Angeleita Floyd (Cedar Falls, IA: Winzer Press, 1993), 54-55.
As Moyse felt the knowledge of nineteenth-century performance practice dwindle, he became more convinced of his own part in preserving this legacy for future generations. Through his recordings, method books, and students (see Table 3.3 below) this goal has been achieved.

THE BOSTON SCHOOL

As the audiences of New York were captivated by both the artistry and showmanship of Georges Barrère, another subtler force was exerting itself in New England. The name “George Laurent” became synonymous with fine flute playing, owing to a warmth of tone that immediately ensnared the unsuspecting ears of Boston. Several generations of flutists would be nurtured by Laurent and his many influential students. The musical atmosphere of this northeastern city blossomed. Multiple music journals, publishers, and flute makers made Boston their home, and the combined influence of Laurent-descendant symphony players and a vital music industry wrought a distinctive environment in which to play and teach the flute.

For a period of seventy-two years, the flute section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had only two different principal flutists (Laurent – 1918-52, and Doriot Anthony Dwyer – 1952-90) and six primary section members (James Pappoutsakis – 1937-78, Philip Kaplan – 1939-70, Paul Fried – 1970-83, Fenwick Smith – 1978-present, George Madsen, piccolo – 1935-65, and Lois Schaefer, piccolo – 1965-90). Four of the six section members were students of Laurent at the New England Conservatory of Music, and as such were steeped in Laurentian concepts of tone and interpretation before they even entered this august orchestra. Of the other major U.S. orchestras (and related educational institutions), only one comes close to such inveteracy and single-teacher domination: Philadelphia and William Kincaid.

In colorful contrast to the sparseness of symphony flutists, the Boston music industry of the same period includes prominent publishers, a host of music journals, and some of the finest flute makers in the world. As Christine Merrick Ayars pointed out in 1937, “Music is largely dependent for its development on the preservation of its literature through printing and on progress in the making of the instruments by which it can be played.”

Boston businesses have risen admirably to both challenges.

Both Carl Fischer and G. Schirmer publishers have Boston connections dating to the late 1800s, as do the educational affiliates Silver, Burdett and DC Heath Companies. More recently, the French publishing house Alphonse Leduc purchased Robert King Music, which has become its prominent American distributor. Likewise, flutemakers Wm. S. Haynes and Verne Q. Powell have longstanding associations in the city, dating from c1888 and 1923 respectively. A third prestigious company, Brannen-Brothers Flutemakers, has continued to earn the respect of flutists throughout the world. In addition, a significant number of independent makers have set up shop recently, including Arista, Burkart-Phelan, Emanuel, Keefe, Lopatin, Nagahara, Martin Gordon, and Williams Flute Companies.

44 Ibid., 215-219.
Though publishing and instrument-making have flourished for centuries, recording technology is only now approaching comparable levels. Boston area flutist Daniel Riley suggests that, in an era when students did not have instant access to compact discs or even the expensive long-playing records, symphony concerts were one of the few places to hear good flute playing in the city.\(^{45}\) Solo flute recitals in Boston did not become common until the late 1970s and 1980s (primarily through Paula Robison, Leone Buyse, and Fenwick Smith), though the Boston Flute Players’ Club programs contained a wealth of chamber music featuring flute. Laurent performed on each of the one hundred concerts, except four whose repertoire included no flute whatsoever.\(^{46}\) In the club’s first four years, other flutists beside Laurent were often featured, but throughout the remainder of its life, only George Madsen, a Laurent student, would appear with any frequency.\(^{47}\)

Laurent students teaching in Boston included the following: James Pappoutsakis teaching at New England Conservatory, Boston Conservatory, Wellesley College, Harvard, Radcliffe, Longy School of Music, and Brandeis University (reportedly teaching forty students annually in addition to Boston Symphony and Boston Pops commitments throughout his forty-year career); Lois Schaefer teaching at New England Conservatory and Boston Conservatory; Philip Kaplan teaching at New England Conservatory and Boston University; William Grass (a student of both Laurent and Pappoutsakis) teaching at New England Conservatory and Boston Conservatory; Claude

\(^{46}\) Concerts number 52, 65, 71, and 89 featured programs of string music.
\(^{47}\) Flutists Marion Jordan, Verne Q. Powell, Walter Knight, John E. MacKnight, Howard Worthington, Lawrence Turno, and Paul Bladet performed in one or more programs, 1921-1924. Gaston Bladet and James Pappoutsakis each performed once, in 1935 and 1938 respectively. George Madsen took part in programs in 1931, 1933, 1935, and 1936.
Monteux teaching at New England Conservatory; George Madsen teaching at Boston University; and Robert Willoughby who, returning to the Boston area after a lengthy career at Oberlin Conservatory, taught privately, commuted weekly to Peabody Conservatory, and currently teaches at the Longy School of Music.48

By mid-century, most players in Boston ensembles received their training from Laurent, or one of his students. Even before Laurent’s retirement in 1952, we see James Pappoutsakis assume a central teaching and performing role in Boston. Because the Boston Symphony Orchestra was not unionized until 1946, it was necessary for Pappoutsakis to resign from the Boston Musicians’ Protective Association in order to take this position.49 He first performed with the Boston Symphony in 1937, and later made a name for himself as first flutist of the Boston Pops series.

Pappoutsakis is described by students and colleagues alike as “kind,” “generous,” and “the perfect gentleman.” He is remembered for a tone filled with “rainbow colors” – radiant, centered and pure – that Lynne Priest Fitzpatrick remarks was “the unique Laurent quality never to be mistaken.” Despite his smoking addiction, whose effects would eventually lead to emphysema and the demise of his career, Lois Schaefer

48 Those symphony flutists active in the Boston Symphony Orchestra through 1990 (the year of Dwyer’s and Schaefer’s retirement) not descending from Laurent are Doriot Dwyer and Fenwick Smith (both graduates of Eastman studying with Joseph Mariano) and Paul Fried (a graduate of Juilliard studying with Julius Baker). Dwyer has taught at the Boston University and Smith teaches at the New England Conservatory.

49 Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives, resignation response, letter dated May 13, 1937.
remembers, “I used to marvel at his breath control all through those years and the way he was able to support a phrase and have a shining tone quality.”

Descending from a generation that did not openly discuss extended techniques, or even alternate fingerings for that matter, Pappoutsakis had a subtle yet profound impact on flute composition of his time. In a letter dated May 22, 1953, Walter Piston writes, “Dear Mr. Pappoutsakis, It was good of you to take the trouble to send me the fingerings of the high notes, especially in the midst of preparations for leaving on the tour. You may be sure I will continue to advise the young composers that they must be used with caution. I remember that Laurent used to deny that they even existed!”

Pappoutsakis taught an enormous load (see Table 4.1 for list of students) at multiple institutions throughout his career, with eighteen of his students winning Fulbright scholarships or other awards for international study. Upon his retirement in 1978, numerous present and former students established the James Pappoutsakis Memorial Fund, and after his 1979 death, friends, colleagues, and students decided to form an organization to stimulate outstanding young artists. Local flutists played a series of monthly concerts in 1980 to raise funds, and the first annual Pappoutsakis Flute Competition was held in 1981. Beginning in 1982, the Memorial Fund also commissioned a new work each year to be used in the competition’s final round.

Alongside Laurent and Pappoutsakis, Lois Schaefer will also figure prominently in future Boston school studies. Flute professor at the New England Conservatory for thirty years, Schaefer is in some ways an unsung heroine in orchestral history. When Doriot Anthony Dwyer was appointed principal flutist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, she was hailed as the first woman to succeed to a principal desk position. Schaefer, however, had already been performing as assistant principal flutist with the Chicago Symphony. Upon her return to Boston, she would perform with the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1965 through 1990, and continue the legacy and legend of Georges Laurent through her own teaching (see Table 4.2 below).

WILLIAM KINCAID: FATHER OF THE AMERICAN FLUTE SCHOOL

William Morris Kincaid was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota, on April 26, 1895. His family made several moves – first to Honolulu, Hawaii, when Kincaid was three years old; next to Charlotte, North Carolina, as his father’s health began to fail; and then to New York City after his father’s death in 1911. Though Kincaid began studying the piano when he was seven years old, and flute when he was eight, his early teachers are not noted in any biographical material.

Kincaid attended the Institute of Musical Art in New York City, where he was a pupil of Georges Barrère. He also studied piano as an undergraduate, but as time passed, his professional playing and touring schedule became too rigorous to allow sufficient practice time for both instruments. Held in high regard by the faculty, Kincaid was often asked to perform in classes and on special concerts. He received his diploma on June 1, 1914, and performed the Polonaise and Badinerie from J.S. Bach’s orchestral Suite in B Minor at the commencement ceremony in Aeolian Hall.53

Perhaps the most significant break for Kincaid was his appointment to the flute section of the New York Symphony Orchestra by conductor Walter Damrosch. From 1914 to 1918, Kincaid played alongside his teacher Barrère and pursued postgraduate work at the Institute. Progress toward the diploma was slow due to his blossoming performance career. Finally, even though he did not attend classes at all during 1917-18, he returned for the final examinations for the Flute Artist’s course. He passed skillfully and received the Artist’s diploma on June 3, 1918.

Before moving to Pennsylvania, where he would establish four-decade tenures with the Philadelphia Orchestra and Curtis Institute of Music, Kincaid also played with the New York Chamber Music Society and served for several months on the Board of Directors of the newly-formed New York Flute Club as second vice-president.

Upon Barrère’s recommendation, Leopold Stokowski offered the principal flute position to Kincaid mid-season in 1921, having been upset with the previous player’s rehearsal behavior. During the next 39 years, William Kincaid would become a focal point of the Philadelphia Orchestra. With the exception of 1928 and 1929, Kincaid was a featured soloist each year with the ensemble in addition to his responsibilities as principal flutist. Among the most performed solos of his career are the J.S. Bach Brandenburg Concertos and Suite in B Minor, Mozart concertos, Griffes Poem, Hanson Serenade, and Kennan Night Soliloquy. Artist record cards, notating dates of solo performances with the orchestra, indicate an amazing 215 concerts that featured William Kincaid as soloist during his tenure.

In the fall of 1924, Kincaid began his association with the Curtis Institute of Music, teaching anywhere from four to nine students per year (most years five). One

55 Philadelphia Orchestra Archives, “Artist Record Card, William Kincaid.”
Curtis student, Robert Cole, notes that in the years of his attendance (1941-42, 1946-49) “no flutist ever played a recital.” In fact, this was also true of the years preceding Cole’s entrance, and was a phenomenon common to music schools of the time. The flute had simply not made itself known yet as a viable instrument for solo recital. Throughout Kincaid’s Curtis teaching career, he made only three faculty recital appearances, each as part of a chamber music program.

The first chamber recital featuring Kincaid was held on May 7, 1930. The program included the Leclair Sonate à trios, and the Ravel Sonatine en trio, in which Kincaid was joined by Felix Salmond, cello, and Carlos Salzedo, harp. On December 13, 1932, the same trio again performed the Leclair Sonate à trios, and also a transcription by Salzedo of Debussy’s Children’s Corner. The last of these faculty appearances was part of an evening of J.S. Bach’s music, occurring on March 20, 1941, and featured the Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 in D Major.

Kincaid, like his forebear Barrère, was a proponent of new music, and numerous composers dedicated works to him. The published or manuscript scores of some of these compositions were bequeathed to the Curtis Institute library and include the 40 works listed below in Table 5.1. Also dedicated to the memory of Kincaid is the Aaron Copland Duo for Flute and Piano, commissioned by Kincaid’s students.

As a teacher, Kincaid was respected and revered. Several of his students, including Robert Cole, Kenneth Scutt, John Krell, Harold Bennett, Burnett Atkinson, and Kenton Terry, would later join Kincaid in the flute section of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Kincaid’s immediate successor, James Pellerite, was a former student, and Pellerite’s successor, Murray Panitz, was a Kincaid “grand-student,” having studied with Joseph Mariano at the Eastman School of Music.

In an interview with the late John de Lancie, Director of the Curtis Institute of Music, Eleanor Lawrence comments on the enviable power Kincaid held to find employment for his graduates, and de Lancie responds:

“It was quite a bit different in those days than it is now. You must understand that in the ‘20s and in the ‘30s – American orchestras were just emerging on the scene. There were maybe four or five major orchestras. And the rest were not particularly important in the sense that they didn’t have the financial backing to provide the kind of living musicians were looking for. The wind sections, in the “minor league” orchestras in particular, were very uneven. For these orchestras it was not economically feasible to have a major 30-35 week season and pay substantial salaries that could draw some of the prominent players.

I believe it was The Curtis Institute that was responsible for the change that took place. Stokowski brought all of the Philadelphia men into the Institute to teach and began to turn out players of really extraordinary quality, like Mariano and Opava, who entered into the market where they were very much in demand.
because they were so good. They were young, they were good; they were better than anything around. So people just began turning to Bill Kincaid.”

De Lancie goes on to point out how a proliferation of music schools and affordable, commercial recordings has dramatically changed the quality of graduating students:

Now, it’s a different situation. You started off with one teacher who produced a number of outstanding pupils – so it’s like a family tree. It’s around to the point now where it’s not an exclusive club of just half a dozen great teachers. . . And then there’s another thing: the ability of the young people of today to hear great playing at will. When I grew up, if you wanted to hear something you had to hear it at a concert. There were so few records. None of us kids had the money to own a record collection. And even if you had the money to buy all the records that existed in the world, you’d probably have about 1/10 of 1 percent of the repertoire that is on the market now…There are young students coming into The Curtis Institute now that are better when they come in than a lot of us were when we left. Because they’ve had this background.”

At the end of the orchestral season each summer, the Kincaids went to their cottage on Little Sebago Lake, near Gray, Maine. The only access to the house was by boat. Robert Cole relates the story of summer lessons:

“If you drove up there and wanted to see the Kincaids you had to go to a certain house on the other side of the lake and ask the man to put up the flag. A few times a day Kincaid would look through his binoculars, and if he felt like it, come over in the boat to see what was up. For years, students would come and board in Gray. Two days a week he would drive his Cris Craft over and pick them up. They would take their lessons in turn, and practice or swim in the meantime. Then he would load them into his boat for the return trip.”

The listing of Kincaid students (see Table 5.2 below) includes all those recorded as such by the Curtis Institute of Music, as well as many private students, though it should by no means be taken as a comprehensive roster.

One of the most oft-remarked pedagogical aspects of Kincaid’s teaching is the concept of note-groupings, whereby music leads to the beat, rather than away from it. For example, in a sixteenth-note passage, the grouping would start on the second sixteenth-note and lead through the third and fourth to its culmination on the next beat. Marcel Tabateau, principal oboist of the Philadelphia Orchestra, was an earlier proponent of this technique, which may be artfully employed by the musician for the mastery of technique, rhythm, and phrasing throughout a composition. Kincaid’s pedagogy is further detailed in Kincaidiana: A Flute Player’s Notebook, in which John Krell shares entries from his lesson notes with Kincaid.58

Though chapter six will focus primarily on the careers of two Kincaid students, Julius Baker and Joseph Mariano, a quick glance at the roster of his prestigious students reveals many prominent teachers and performers. Flutists such as Clement Barone, Jr., Harold Bennett, Judith Bentley, Frances Blaisdell, Doriot Dwyer, Britton Johnson, John Krell, Betty Bang Mather, William Montgomery, George Ellers Morey, Jr., Donald Peck, James Pellerite, Maurice Sharp, Albert Tipton, Robert Willoughby, John Wion and others have been producing students of high caliber for decades. As the Flutists’ Family Tree becomes more and more complete, these branches will evolve into noteworthy limbs of their own accord.

58 John Krell, Kincaidiana: A Flute Player’s Notebook (Culver City, CA: Trio Associates, 1973). This work was widely circulated amongst Curtis Institute students, often in the form of uncredited photocopies, before its subsequent publication.

The breadth of Kincaid’s legacy to present-day flutists is quickly shown through the careers of his students who have occupied prominent teaching and performing positions across the country. One concern that future pedagogical studies may address is the nature of these flutists’ study with Kincaid as compared to their studies with other masters (as many descend jointly from Barrère/Kincaid and Laurent, or Barrère/Kincaid and Moyse).

Three of the foremost American teaching positions were for many years held by two students of undisputed Kincaid lineage, however. Julius Baker has served as flute professor at Juilliard since 1954 and Curtis since 1980, and Joseph Mariano was enlisted as flute professor at Eastman from 1945-74. Their long-standing association with these schools has given them a unique opportunity to work with a large number of highly advanced students (chosen from among the country’s most superior applicants) in a way that others were not afforded. Let us now explore the careers and legacies of these two unique Kincaid descendants in order to further our understanding of the constituents of a Barrère-based American school of flute playing.
Julius Baker

Julius Baker was born in 1915 in Cleveland, Ohio, and studied flute with his father. Baker was accepted to the Curtis Institute of Music in 1933, but economic downturn closed the school’s doors to incoming freshman that year. Instead, Baker first attended the Eastman School of Music, studying with Italian flutist Leonardo de Lorenzo, before beginning studies with Kincaid when Curtis re-opened in 1934.

After graduation, he played second flute to Maurice Sharp with the Cleveland Orchestra, conducted by Artur Rodzinski. Upon the invitation of Fritz Reiner, whom Baker had played under at Curtis, he accepted the first of many appointments as principal flutist, this time with the Pittsburgh Symphony from 1941-43. Next, he would play for the CBS Symphony in New York City from 1943-51. One of Baker’s most famous recordings (the St. Saens’ Carnival of the Animals “Voliere”) is from this period under the direction of Castalanitz.

An avid ham-radio operator, Baker’s curiosity about electronics led to a decade of experimentation with recording. Indeed, from 1946 to 1951 he produced six albums on his own label, Oxford Recording Company (one of which was a solo piano release, the other five were flute). It was during this same time that Baker joined the famed Bach Aria Group in New York.

The CBS Symphony, a radio broadcasting orchestra, disbanded in 1951 as television began to displace radio in family entertainment. Baker took a one-year sabbatical from the Bach Aria Group to accept a principal position with the Chicago Symphony, and the following year commuted between the two. In 1953, he made the decision to return to the Bach Aria Group full time.
Now back in New York City, he was hired as flute instructor at the Juilliard School in 1954, teaching alongside Frederick Wilkins and Arthur Lora. Through this long-standing association, Baker would be in a position to teach some of the most advanced flute students in the nation. He also taught privately during these years and began a summer master class in California that would attract amateur and professional flutists from across the country, much like those of Marcel Moyse.

In 1963, Baker became the first foreign flutist to give a recital in Japan. Since this time, he has concertized widely in Japan and Korea, as well as Europe, attracting a number of Asian students to his flute studio.

When a principal flute opening with the New York Philharmonic was announced, upon the retirement of Barrère student John Wummer, Baker decided to audition. His colleague and friend, Mitch Miller, advised him to wait and make the Philharmonic management seek him out. Baker followed this recommendation, and was indeed approached directly with an offer. From 1965 to 1983, Baker performed with the orchestra under the direction of Zubin Mehta, Pierre Boulez, and Leonard Bernstein.

In 1980, Baker also began teaching at the Curtis Institute of Music, commuting between New York and Philadelphia. Upon his retirement from the New York Philharmonic in 1983, he passed the principal chair to Jeanne Baxtresser, who had been his student at Juilliard in the late 1960s. Baker devoted himself to promoting the flute through solo concerts and teaching around the world. He added students at Carnegie Hall.

Like her teacher and mentor, Baxtresser also taught at Juilliard (1986-2001), in addition to the symphony commitment.
Mellon Institute in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, to his teaching schedule for a number of years in the 1990s, before passing that post to Baxtresser as well.

His summer workshops have moved to the campus of Western Connecticut University, to be closer to the family home in Brewster, New York, and now also feature a number of prominent Baker students as instructors. Today, at 87 years of age, Baker still serves on the faculties of Juilliard and Curtis, by both of which he is being conferred honorary Doctor of Musical Arts degrees this May. He has recorded for the RCA Victor, Columbia, Decca, Vanguard, Westminster, Vox Cum Laude, and VAI labels, in addition to his own Oxford Record Company and latest venture, Manhattan Flute Center.

Joseph Mariano

Born in 1911 in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Joseph Mariano began playing the flute at age twelve, when one was given to his father as payment for a job. His first lessons were with Victor Saudek, before attending Curtis to study with Kincaid and oboist Marcel Tabateau. Mariano received the Artist’s Diploma in 1933, and played for one season as principal flutist of the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D.C. He returned to Philadelphia, playing briefly beside his teacher as second flutist, until receiving the dual engagement as principal flutist of the Rochester Philharmonic and instructor at the Eastman School of Music in 1935.\(^{60}\)

While many of Mariano’s influential performances (reading sessions led by Eastman Director Howard Hanson and numerous Rochester Philharmonic concerts) have been recorded, only a relative few have ever seen public release or broadcast. This is in sharp contrast to the wealth of 78s, LPs, and CD releases afforded Julius Baker in his lifetime. In an attempt to share the artistry and eloquence of this under-heard pioneer of twentieth-century flute playing, the National Flute Association recently released the second volume of its historic recording series, dedicated to Joseph Mariano and featuring thirteen performances spanning thirty years (1939-69).

Through the venue of Eastman’s American Music Festivals, Mariano (like his forebears Taffanel and Barrère) had the opportunity to deeply affect how composers conceived of, and wrote for the flute. A former student, now teaching at the University of Idaho, Patricia Dengler George remarks:

“Mariano had a profound effect on the composers of America. His performances during the American Music Festivals... developed a truly American style of flute playing. It was especially interesting to watch Mariano work during these festivals. He would be performing music that no one had seen or heard, yet his performance would be of an artistic level that made you sure he had known the music for years.”61

In the preparation for the National Flute Association Mariano release, Boston Symphony flutist and former Mariano student Fenwick Smith, visited the Eastman Recorded Archives to hear live recordings of these sessions:

“The experience was fascinating, inspiring – and frustrating. Hanson’s Symposiums were basically reading sessions with open microphone, offering budding composers an opportunity to hear their music played by a professional orchestra, before a live audience. Over the years Mariano performed at least a dozen pieces, almost all for flute and string orchestra, under these conditions. He was always superbly prepared, but the efforts of the sight-reading orchestra often fell far below the standards expected by the modern listener.”62

Two of these works are featured on the CD (Gardner Read’s Threnody, and James Adair’s Concertino da Camera) and along with other, more standard repertoire (such as two J.S. Bach Sonatas, Charles Griffes’ Poem, and Kent Kennan’s Night Soliloquy), clearly demonstrate Mariano’s signature tone and impeccable technique.

Current Eastman School of Music instructor, and former Mariano student, Bonita Boyd speaks of her mentor’s commitment to integrity and professionalism:

“He taught without verbalizing it, that great things happen musically when you take chances, use your sound, and let the music speak for itself in beauty and simplicity of line. He is an artist of massive proportions who puts the music first, and who has, as do the greatest artists on any instrument, the strength of character and purpose not to opt for commercial success and fame before the values of mature artistic growth and individual expression, which make great music-making possible.”63

Mariano’s thirty-nine-year tenure at Eastman has shaped the careers of numerous members of today’s professional flute community. These include orchestral flutists, university professors, flute makers, and industry innovators (such as Shaul Ben-Meir, founder of Flute World, Inc.) spreading his legacy throughout the United States and into Canada.

Joseph Mariano remained with the Rochester Philharmonic through 1968, “despite overtures made to him by Fritz Reiner (Chicago Symphony) and Arturo Toscanini (NBC Symphony),”64 and continued teaching at Eastman until 1974. While still in good health today, his teaching and performing careers essentially concluded upon his retirement nearly three decades ago.

CONCLUSIONS AND IMPLICATIONS

In an era that celebrates diversity, we often overlook broad commonalities in order to distinguish ourselves from one another. Though the more than 8,000 flutists comprised in this study have careers in every area from classical and jazz music to engineering, they are drawn together by a heritage of transverse flute playing and teaching that has been carried on for three centuries.

Today’s American flutists stem from one or more of three branches, each led by a prominent Frenchman. The Barrère branch is by far the biggest, including 91% of flutists with documented American-school ancestry. Laurent and Moyse follow with 59% and 55% of American-school players tracing ancestry through them. Owing to the cumulative nature of musical study with multiple teachers, flutists may trace ancestral roots through all three of these branches, perhaps melding them along the way into unique new performance and pedagogical styles. This is the case for roughly 39% of flutists whose lineage is documented in Appendix A.65

The most prominent American-born flute pedagogue was a member of the Barrère branch, having studied with this master teacher at the Institute of Musical Art. William 65 The ancestry of 1666 flutists appearing in Appendix A (out of the 4360 flutists with known American-school ancestry) descends jointly from Barrère, Laurent, and Moyse.

Kincaid then spent four decades teaching at the Curtis Institute of Music and performing with the Philadelphia Orchestra. His students went on to take top seats in nearly every American orchestra and assume teaching roles at colleges and universities throughout the country. Most noteworthy among these students were Julius Baker and Joseph Mariano, whose own students have distinguished themselves throughout North America and around the world. Other pedagogues such as Clement Barone, Jr., Harold Bennett, Judith Bentley, Frances Blaisdell, Doriot Dwyer, Britton Johnson, John Krell, Betty Bang Mather, William Montgomery, George Ellers Morey, Jr., Donald Peck, James Pellerite, Maurice Sharp, Albert Tipton, Robert Willoughby, and John Wion, to name only a few, have also been producing students of very high caliber. We will likely see each of these limbs develop into prominent branches as the Flutist's Family Tree continues to grow.

In response to Ardal Powell’s characterization of the “French School” (as noted in chapter 1), we may now draw certain parallels between the two nations’ approaches to the playing and teaching of flute. Whereas the dominant French pedagogues and players of the twentieth-century studied with Paris Conservatoire professor Paul Taffanel and his students, the equivalent American flutists can be traced (a generation later) to William Kincaid. The French-style silver flute (brought to this country by Barrère and Laurent) quickly won out over the wooden German-style flutes used previously, and the famed Taffanel-Gaubert method and the tone development exercises of Moyse have become standard tools for collegiate instruction.

As with the “French School,” difficulties exist in precisely defining aspects of tone and technique (not to mention the extremely elusive qualities of interpretation) for an entire country’s flutists. It is this author’s opinion that such characteristics are best discussed within the context of the playing and teaching of a single flutist. One must first determine the many facets of an individual’s pedagogy and performance, how that information is disseminated to students, and what (if any) impact is discernible through analysis of the playing and teaching of those students over time. Only after such detailed analysis has occurred, can we begin to make knowledgeable assessments about a national style of instrumental music playing.

At that point, answers to numerous other questions will become clearer. Are there similarities of circumstance between key musical pedagogues of a nation? Are specific educational institutions or performance organizations more likely to promote the careers of such teachers? What circumstances preceded the shift in U.S. culture from study with one master teacher to receiving instruction from multiple teachers? Are there ramifications for flutists seeking careers in music both before and after this shift, and is this strictly a U.S. phenomenon, or has it affected musical study on a national scale? As with any genealogy, the acquisition of knowledge often generates far more questions than answers.

Sometimes, however, the answers appear before a question is even asked. Three such conclusions make important statements about the evolution of instrumental music in the twentieth-century United States. First, we witness a shift in the employment of orchestral principals from foreign countries (namely Germany and France) to American-born and trained flutists beginning around 1920 and lasting through the 1990s, when foreign flutists Jacques Zoon (Boston Symphony Orchestra) and Mathieu Dufour
(Chicago Symphony Orchestra) win significant auditions in America. Second, the rise of the flute as a viable solo instrument (and the subsequent upsurge in number of fine flutists), has facilitated a change in collegiate level music instruction. Where once music departments would employ a single individual to teach all of the woodwind instruments (and perhaps all the winds), they now employ specialists for each instrument. Finally, because of the increased need for specialization in order to gain collegiate employment, a rising number of flutists seek advanced degrees, most frequently at different institutions from their undergraduate degrees. The increased number of teachers and musical influences upon a student leads to an eventual melting-pot where concepts of tone, technique, and interpretation are blended together from multiple “schools” of teaching and performing.

With the roots of our American flute school firmly established, the Flutists’ Family Tree is now in a position to provide numerous resources to its musical community. Through academic and professional conventions, the study has already been displayed in formats ranging from family-tree-style (see Figure 7.1) and single-teacher descendant (see Figure 7.2), to one which pinpoints career migration of single-teacher descendants on a map (see Figure 7.3). My most immediate goal is to engage specialists in the United Kingdom, Canada, and France to assist with compilation of data for these countries’ flutists, as their ancestry is most closely allied with that of the Americans.

66 I suspect the same statement may be true for other woodwind instruments as well. This shift begins in the late 1960s, and has various other ramifications. Most significant, perhaps, is that a majority of collegiate level flute instructors in the United States are employed as adjunct professors (often at more than one institution) and have little or no hope of achieving tenure.

For future research about individual flute teachers, the study provides ancestry as well as names of descendants who may be contacted for interview. One way this feature has already been used is by organizers of tributes to a specific teacher. An organizer may ask the Flutists’ Family Tree to forward information about an event to students/descendants, or may obtain a simple list of students.
Through a planned CD-Rom searchable database, the public will be able to sort data by any category – teachers, students, birth date, place of birth, performance ensembles, or allied professions (flute maker, conductor, composer, etc.) – or several at a time. The biographies also serve as an index for individuals appearing in the National Flute Association convention programs of the last 30 years, the Aldine Burks survey, and the John Wion and Larry Krantz orchestral flutist rosters. A future objective of the project is to cross-reference entries to a wider variety of informational material, including periodical references to individuals and any books or compositions routinely associated with the flutist.

For players of other instruments and singers, this study may serve as a model for ancestral and pedagogical research, while the software utilized in data collection and distribution could be easily adapted for such purpose. It is not unreasonable to hypothesize that similar confluences and large-scale common pedagogical ancestry might be found in other instrument families, especially the woodwinds.

Finally, for musicians of all sorts, the Flutists’ Family Tree sends a message that, regardless of our strengths or weaknesses, the number of hours per week we practice, the fame or obscurity of our teachers or students, the schools we attend, or the careers we have chosen, we are following a road that numerous other musicians have paved to make the language and spirit of music come to life.

67 Present data includes only the U.S. orchestras from Wion and Krantz’s listings.
68 This could include websites, articles and books written by or about the specific flutist, as well as methods and compositions authored, edited, or translated by, or dedicated to a specific flutist, and recordings featuring solo and ensemble work of the flutist. The Flutists’ Family Tree could thus become a starting point for flutist-related research, especially if employed in an easily-updateable electronic format.
APPENDIX A:

FLUTIST BIOGRAPHICAL INFORMATION

Each complete entry includes the following information:

1. Full name including middle and maiden, any aliases including names from previous marriages (in parentheses), and “nickname.”

2. Flutist ancestral lineage. Indicates descent from three roots of American Flute School [Laurent (L), Moyse (M), Barrere (B)]. In the case of Barrere, it also indicates connections through Kincaid (k), Baker (b), and Mariano (m).

3. Source(s) of information (see references below).

4. Date and location of birth/death.

5. City, state, ZIP, or country in which most recent address is known by the project. [N.B., for entries whose sole source is the 1969 Burks publication, this material is quite dated.]

6. Secondary education (in italics). Includes degree(s) earned, institution (see abbreviations), and date of graduation (or attendance, if no degree was awarded). May sometimes include areas of concentration, such as theory or composition.

7. Listing of flute teachers.

8. Faculty affiliation. Includes institution name (see abbreviations) and dates of employment or period of known activity.

9. Orchestral affiliation. Includes ensemble name (see abbreviations), dates of service or period of known activity, and position(s) held. Does not include ensembles affiliated with colleges or universities. $p=$principal, $cp=$co-principal, $ap=$assistant or associate principal, $pc=$piccolo, $2=$2$^{nd}$ flute, $3=$3$^{rd}$ flute, $4=$4$^{th}$ flute, $ut=$utility flute, $ex=$extra flute, $sub=$substitute flute.
10. Additional comments. May highlight employment or service to the flute community, such as flutemakers or flute club presidents.

Source material

Biographical data has been obtained from a variety of sources, both primary and secondary, as well as through reasonably reliable input from members of the flute community. These sources are documented within each entry as follows:

A Flutist First initial and last name indicate a third party providing information to the Flutists’ Family Tree. Most are teachers, fellow students or colleagues of the flutist in question.

AB Biographical data (submitted by the named individual) appearing in Aldine K. Burks’ 1969 publication “Follow the Pipers.” Ms. Burks surveyed flutists from North American orchestras (of all size and caliber) and colleges and universities in 1968. This work is exciting because it highlights flutists active before the inception of the National Flute Association; however, there are numerous typographical errors such as misspelling and mis-alphabeticization of names. One must bear in mind that this labor of love was produced on a manual typewriter at the author’s own expense, and as such, should not be dismissed out of hand.

Cross-referencing

Entries are cross-referenced to include all known aliases for an individual. It is possible that, with the nature of marriage and divorce, some entries may have inadvertently been keyed to a surname that is no longer appropriate. In such case, the author will graciously receive corrections and make updates as appropriate in subsequent publications of the Flutists’ Family Tree.

Contact information

Though many submissions to the Flutists’ Family Tree include specific contact information (address, phone, e-mail), these will not be printed in any publication of the project to retain privacy. Should the reader wish to contact a flutist mentioned herein, a forwarding service may be provided by the author at the reader’s expense.
